REPORT

OF THE

Superintendent of Public Instruction.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION,
HARRISBURG, December 3, 1881.

Address.

To His Excellency HENRY M. HOYT,
Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania:

SIR: In obedience to the law, the undersigned has the honor to submit herewith the annual report of the Superintendent of Public Instruction for the year ending June 6, 1881.

Preface.

The character of the following report has been conditioned by the fact, that there is no Legislature at present in session to which plans of improvement and suggestions in reference to needed legislation can be submitted. It contains, therefore, only a general survey of the field, and a brief intimation of the policy deemed best to be pursued, together with the statistics usually accompanying such report. We have, however, made a tentative effort to secure full statistics of the educational work done in the Commonwealth by the various universities, colleges, and academies. We have not done this with any thought of bringing these institutions under immediate State supervision, or with any anticipation that they will ever be directly supported by funds from the Legislature. Very many of them are under direct ecclesiastical control, and in such form cannot by law receive aid from the State. Our object, as will subsequently appear in this report, has been to urge the necessity, not of external connection with the State, but of such internal relation to the school system of the Commonwealth, and of such sympathetic fellowship with the same, as shall make the estate of learning throughout our bounds more unified and harmonious.

General Acquiescence in the Necessity of the System.

The common school system, as now in force, can be regarded as a permanent factor in the social culture of the State. There are those, without doubt, who desire a change in some of its features, but no one wishes its overthrow. The children of the Commonwealth must be taught, and this is simply impossible without some system, under the guidance and guardianship of the law. And, in a government like ours, such guardianship cannot, in reference to those who are to receive its benefits, make or allow any distinctions of high or low, rich or poor, bond or free. The possible blessings of the system must be common to all. Connected with the system there are, it is true, problems of great difficulty, and as yet unsolved, growing out of the relations of Church and State, but those difficulties are not of such a character as to warrant any radical attempts to give up the present system and try another, nor do we believe that there are very many within the State who seriously entertain a thought of this kind.

Directors.

The three fundamental factors of the system, severally represented by directors, teachers, and superintendents, are recognized as necessary by all who have given the subject much serious study, and there is no disposition throughout the Commonwealth to set either of them aside. The law, however, has granted to the directors a very wide range of powers, which, without great prudence and wisdom upon their part may work serious injury. Very properly, in our judgment, the directors are elected immediately by the people, in their several districts, because they have the whole matter of school sites and school buildings, and the engagement and salaries of teachers under their jurisdiction. But in the grading of schools, and the selection of text-books and necessary apparatus, it would be better, we think, that the law should require the supervision of the county superintendent, who ought to be, by virtue of his office, specially qualified for such work. When we take into view the various business engagements of the directors, it cannot be expected that they will have much experience in teaching, or that present mastery of any given branch of study which is necessary to give critical ability in the selection of proper text-books or apparatus. When, in addition to this, we find the whole country flooded with text-books of almost every character, and these books all alike pushed upon the market with indefatigable persistency, some authoritative supervision, beyond that of the directors alone, seems to be required, if a proper selection or any very wide range of uniformity is to be secured. No doubt in the framing of the law, it was expected that some supervision upon the part of the superintendents should be exercised, both in grading and selecting text-books and apparatus. But it should not be left in any doubt, and the authority should be an explicit requirement of law.

Results of the System.

The results of the system, if directors, teachers, and superintendents do their duty, as contemplated by the law, must meet the approval of an intelligent people. It is very difficult, of course, by comparison of statistics, simply to gain a satisfactory estimate of the good or evil results of any system of education. Education is so much a matter of life, and has so much to do with the spiritual elements of character, and the already surrounding culture and spirit of the age, that it is quite impossible from numbers to ascertain what it has accomplished or is accomplishing. Nor can we, by contrasting one period with another, mark the progress or regress of its movement. It would be strange, indeed, to argue, for example, that, because we now have no such men as Shakspeare and Marlow, and Webster, and Johnson, and others who glorified the English tongue in the sixteenth century, our educational systems are at fault, giving us in the field of literature pygmies only when of old there were giants. Centuries differ in their gifts, and neither providence nor the spirit of an age comes under the control of the systems of men, be they never so skillfully wrought. If, as some are pleased to maintain, we find ourselves intellectually and morally weaker than were our fathers, who trudged through wildernesses to study on rude benches in ruder hovels, it does not follow that by going back to their methods, we can develop their manhood. The fault may be in ourselves, and our historical surroundings (which are beyond our immediate control,) and not in our educational systems, that we are underlings. It is enough, at least, for us to know that, with earnest and prudent directors, competent and faithful teachers, and superintendents of broad and thorough scholarship, we have reasonable grounds for believing that, under the blessing of God, the results will be all that we ought to expect. The effort, therefore, should be permanently to supply and support the ablest directors, and teachers, and superintendents that the highest culture of the Commonwealth can give us.

Caution against Mannerism.

There are, no doubt, many details of the system which will need revision and adjustment from time to time, that the main work may not run into mannerism, and merely mechanical routine. There always is danger, that while emphasizing the art-element of teaching, we lose sight of the important truth that teaching is not primarily an art governed by external methods, but a virtue, an ethical act, governed by the inward laws of our personal life. At this time, however, the department has no special suggestions to make in regard to the management of examinations and the granting of certificates. This whole subject is now under most careful study, and we believe that the whole interest can be guarded against that narrow pedantry, and stiff artificialness which are so apt to creep in under the very eyes of those who would most gladly cast them out.

Course of Studies.

In regard to the extent of the course of studies proper to be pursued in our common schools there are, as might be expected, divergent sentiments throughout the State. But little difficulty, however, has been found in fixing the minimum. This is quite uniform. Orthography, reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, and grammar are required by law to be taught in the schools of our Commonwealth, and most of the States of the Union have added to these, history of the United States, and some, physiology. In no school whatever should there be a departure from this so-well established course, until the directors and county superintendent, by means of careful examination, are fully satisfied that the children have a firm foundation in these elementary branches; nor should any studies be introduced, under the discretionary power granted by law to the directors, which may cause these required branches to be neglected or slightly passed over.

But, as any thoughtful man may see, in our larger cities, where the atmosphere of culture stimulates the educational work of the schools to greater activity and efficiency, creating thus a demand for advancement and enlargement, it would be unwise to bind the directors to this mere minimum, and the law, therefore, has very justly left all such natural and necessary enlargement to the discretion and good judgment of the directors themselves.

Just here, however, the trouble may be said to begin. How shall we determine the maximum to be allowed? How far shall the system reach? Every scholar knows that knowledge can have no other limit than the truth itself. Its range is boundless, and every advance, in physical or metaphysical investigation only opens the way to an infinite beyond. The State, from its very office, must in some form see to it not only that no restraints be imposed upon the full and free expansion of intelligence, but also that all proper helps and encouragements be at hand to further it. The negative duty of restraint (generally acknowledged) implies at once the positive duty of encouragement. We are not now attempting to determine whether, as the needs of education advance from what is most elementary to that which is highest, they shall be met by the immediate activity of the State in way of direct taxation and supervision, or mediately through the voluntary activity of the citizens. A line may be drawn (such as has already been drawn to some extent, by the circumstances of our history,) determining how much shall be done in the one way and how much in the other. Great care must be taken that this line, wherever and however drawn, shall not abruptly sever the two parts, and hold them out of relation to each other, and in antagonism. One common life should pervade the whole body of public instruction throughout the Commonwealth. The estate of learning demands such unity of organization to make itself felt, and to sustain its own high prerogative.

We have within the bounds of the State, as already intimated, a large amount of higher education made possible by the wise generosity of noble men in our time, and in the times of our fathers. In some cases, at the outset, this work was helped by the State directly, and in all cases encouraged by and under the privilege and guardianship of its charter. I have felt it my duty to gather and embody in this report, all the statistical information I could obtain relating to this work, regarding it as properly, or at least inferentially within the province of a Superintendent of Public Instruction. I would direct special attention to the tabulated statements found on pages l, li, and lii, of this report, for which I give thanks to Deputy Lindsey, by whose close historical investigation they were constructed. I regret that these statistics are not more full and satisfactory. They are enough, however, to show that our Commonwealth of Pennsylvania is well supplied with institutions in which all the higher branches of study are earnestly pursued and successfully taught.

Now, between the minimum of merely elementary studies which are required by law to be taught in all our common schools, and the maximum of higher branches as embraced in our chartered colleges and universities, there is a course of intermediate studies taught in the so-called private academies, and in the high schools, which have naturally grown up, as before said, in our larger cities. Some conflict of opinion exists in various sections of the State, growing out of the question whether the common school system shall not free itself from this high school work entirely, and allow this interest to be carried forward solely by the private enterprise of the academies. I have already said, that it would be unwise to restrain the freedom of the directors in our larger cities, in whose prudent discretion each municipality can confide, and especially would it be disadvantageous to do so, when every facility is given to connect these high schools with the lower graded schools within the same jurisdiction. This will not remove the necessity of a large number of private academies to accomplish the work required. It is very important, however, that these high schools carefully see to it that they keep in mind their intermediate position and character, and maintain, on the one hand, such a course of studies as shall fit those who return from them, to enter into the various pursuits of ordinary life, and also, on the other hand, have in operation such a course of preparatory studies as shall fit those, who may desire it, to go onward into the higher range of studies pursued in our chartered colleges and universities. Without such intermediate link, or inward bond of relationship, the whole interest of elementary studies will be so dissevered from the higher culture already at hand, as either directly to antagonize it, or fail to gain the rich benefit of its inspiration.

Normal Schools.

What is here said in reference to the high schools, applies with still greater force even, to those intermediate studies pursued in our numerous State normal schools. A normal school, it is true, is supposed mainly to attend to such professional studies as are required to make a student, already possessed of proper attainments, a skillful and successful teacher. It demands, therefore, upon the part of its professors, the very highest attainments in any given branch of study, and profound psychological knowledge, together with large pedagogic experience; for every science reveals the proper method of its study only to such as are familiar with it by long investigation and practice. It demands, also, upon the part of the student, such advancement and preparatory mastery of any branch of study as shall enable him to review it under the normal professor, with direct and exclusive reference to the professional work of guiding others to its attainment. Such normal schools are felt to be a necessity, in order to give back to our schools the most competent and well-drilled teachers. Corresponding thus to other strictly professional schools, such as those of law, or medicine, or theology, we should expect but little labor expended upon the intermediate course of studies already referred to. But from the circumstances of their foundation, and the necessities confronting them, our State normal schools are only partially of this character. They maintain a large measure of intermediate studies taught after the same manner as other well-conducted schools, or, in other words, they are at the same time academic and normal. They are of a mixed character, not only in this respect, but also in their relation to the State; that is, they are both private and public institutions. At the present time, to add to the difficulties of the case, many of them are heavily involved in debt, demanding either great sacrifices upon the part of their trustees and friends, or large appropriations from the State to keep them in proper financial standing. I have made a full investigation into their financial condition, and have appended a carefully prepared statistical table, showing their indebtedness from year to year, together with the appropriations made in their behalf by the Legislature. At present there are ten of them in operation, and by the provisions of the law, three more may be added. It would be wrong, no doubt, to infer from their indebtedness that there has been extravagant mismanagement upon their part. The Legislature itself created them, and demanded of them truly colossal appliances —grounds not less than ten acres in area, buildings whose halls shall severally seat comfortably one thousand adults, &c., &c. It is not for us to inquire why the initial effort to secure normal schools assumed such large proportions. We have them by the provisions of the law, which ought to be respected, and they constitute, in such form, part of the school system of the State; and, notwithstanding their mixed character and their struggles with indebtedness, they have been of much service. They require, upon the part of all thoughtful men, most careful consideration.

At present, the department is not prepared to suggest any positive policy in reference to them. Their number, however, if not greatly reduced, should not be increased; and I think there is but little disposition to occupy the districts now vacant. They should, as rapidly as possible, develop into purely professional schools, and, in the meantime, their course of intermediate studies should be in accordance with the policy already indicated in what has been said in reference to all intermediate schools, and their indebtedness should be speedily removed. Some more definite course of action, which the interests of these schools demand, may reveal itself before the time arrives requiring a report to be submitted to the Legislature when in session.

In this connection, and before concluding this report, we cannot refrain from calling favorable attention to the important educational work within our State done at Carlisle, in behalf of the Indians, by the General Government, under the well-devised labors of Colonel Pratt.

Out of the humane policies inaugurated by the good people of this country, notably the attempts at enlightenment and christianization by the Quakers and other religious denominations, a solution of the Indian problem is evolving, which is alike advantageous to the nation and its wards.

From a band of Indian prisoners brought to St. Augustine in 1875, from thence to Hampton Institute in 1877, and finally to Carlisle in 1879, the Indian training school has been established in this State. It now numbers nearly three hundred students, from twenty-four different tribes. The tribes represented are the most troublesome ones to the Government at this time. Many of the students are under twelve years of age, while some of them are adults, who are learning trades and acquainting themselves with our language. Instruction at the school is largely objective. Its primary purpose is to attain a proper use of the English language, but trades, and other forms of hand-labor, are continually practiced. Music and the elementary branches ordinarily taught in the public schools are rapidly acquired, and the farm, household, and mechanical labor performed by the scholars has been profitable to the school, beyond the cost of material and instruction. Work on the farm, in the kitchen, in the shops, and in the sewing-room, advances rather than retards the work of the schoolroom, thus evincing that intellectual training and industrial pursuit are mutual aids to the advancement of the student. Discipline, economy, and decency, which are so much neglected by the Indian, are the natural outgrowths of this systematic and practical civilization.

During vacations, and now permanently, Indians are placed in white families throughout the Commonwealth, assuming all the duties and privileges of the white children. They perform labor, attend the district schools and christian churches, and become residents of communities. Our school law is broad enough to admit into the common schools all individuals between the ages of six and twenty-one years, who in good faith permanently reside in the several school districts, and these children enter our schools as other children of the proper district. In but one district of the State was objection raised to the admission of Indian children to the schools, and this objection has been unanimously withdrawn by the school board.

With the Indian, the object is civilization; with us, it is culture. The two objects are but stages of the same growth, and when we have led the Indian up to our plane, along with every nationality within our midst, common interest and sacred duty bid us continue the development toward physical, intellectual, moral, and christian perfection, for continued humanity to man is endless praise to God.

E. E. HIGBEE,
Superintendent of Public Instruction.
